expertly opened up and expanded, this Melbourne home now fits its new family to a tee

Materials are to the architect as paint is to the artist, and that is why this home can only be described as a masterpiece. Expanses of meticulously book-matched marble, gently curving Corian joinery and era-appropriate bluestone cladding all work together to make it so.

The owners of this home in Melbourne's south had admired the work of architect John Matyas when he completed a project for their friends. They had also spotted his signs on heritage renovations around their suburb. "It was pretty clear to us that John was the right architect for our project," says the homeowner.

What John and his design team took on was a complex and comprehensive renovation of the Victorian-era double-fronted home, which was rather rundown after having been used as a share house for years. "It had lean-tos tacked on the back, it was dark and claustrophobic inside, and almost all of the period features were long gone," says John. With little apart from a heritage >

Corian was the material of choice for the kitchen’s benchtops. “It’s a surface that doesn’t mark easily and it allowed us to introduce some more fluid, rounded edges,” says John. A wall of mirror by the walk-in pantry helps to bounce light around the room and creates the illusion that the kitchen’s heavenly marble splashback stretches on and on.

The living area has been cleverly designed to borrow both space and light from the stairwell. “There’s glass at either end of the stairs: morning light floods in from the bottom while afternoon sun pours in from the top,” says John. “The glass wall by the stairs is frameless to enclose them without reducing the width of the living zone. A long built-in bench/display shelf under the stairs also works to visually increase the size of the room.” Upstairs, there’s a main bedroom with a glorious Carrara marble-clad ensuite, bedrooms for each of the children and the main bathroom.

High-performance glass doors lead out from the open-plan living area to a rear courtyard, their green tint reflecting the beauty of the garden, which is the work of landscape designer Le Page Design. The backyard is a wonderful asset to the house, says the owner: “We love the bluestone cladding John has used, and the fact that the kids have enough space to play in.” A lot of attention was paid to an established tree in rear courtyard. “The garage is built around the root zone of the tree to protect it,” says John. Stacking doors on the garage allow it to open right up and transform into another play area for the children.

“We had so much trust in John and I think this is evident in the home we have today,” says the owner. “Yes, the marble on the walls is breathtaking, but this is still a relaxed, casual home that suits our family perfectly.”

THIS IS THE LIFE

"What we have now is a family-friendly, safe, practical and beautiful home that does everything we could wish it to," says the homeowner. "We had never undertaken a project like this before but the fantastic relationship we developed with John meant we were assured of an excellent outcome." The family has plenty of living space now and love their locale. "We're close to the city and to a great park for the kids. It really is a perfect spot for us."
